Volunteers' involvement is the balance of three sets of rights: those of the client/recipient, those of the volunteer and those of the agency. Each situation defines which perspective takes precedence. The key is not to presuppose that one perspective always outweighs the others.

Volunteers have the right to be mavericks and generate genuine social change and sometimes the founding of other organizations, changes in culture or law. Volunteering is a strategy for getting things done, of accomplishing mutual goals and allows people to stand up for their beliefs.

The best volunteering is an exchange in which the give and the recipient both benefit. Volunteering empowers the people who do it and is inherently optimistic and future-oriented.

Thank you for volunteering!
